Cal Poly students Mary Ann Lewis and Craig Low sign up for available co-op positions. A proposed bill increasing work-study funding would probably not affect the present co-op program at this university, but would complement it, according to co-op Director Fred Abitia.

Bill may expand state work-study

By JOHN BACHMAN
Staff Writer

College work-study programs may be expanded in California if a bill proposed by an education commission is passed by the state legislature.

In an attempt to limit the debts from students taking out loans, and to make up for recent cuts in financial aid, the Postsecondary Education Commission is proposing a state funded work-study program.

The proposal calls for $1.5 million for a pilot work-study program, which is an attempt to stretch financial aid dollars by having students work and receive matching funds from employers, said a commission research assistant who helped write Senate Bill 417, which is being introduced by Senator Gary K. Hart (D-Santa Barbara).

Students must meet the federal aid need requirement to qualify for the work-study program. The bill calls for non-profit employers to pay at least 40 percent, and for other profit businesses to pay 30 percent of students' salaries.

In a recent study, the commission found that student fees at schools in the California State University system have risen 216 percent since 1980. Since 1978 the number of students taking out loans has risen from 19 to 50 percent, while the amount of grant money available has decreased.

The bill is designed to create new jobs by bringing new employers into the program, said Research Assistant Greg Gallihur. Students would be able to work 20 hours a week while classes are in session, and must work in a field related to their studies, receiving a comparable wage to professionals doing the same work.

Cal Poly currently sends about 600 students out on work-study, with each student qualifying for a $750 award, work-study Coordinator Becky Madden said. Under the new bill, students could receive $3,900, with 80 percent of their salaries paid for by the federal government.

The school receives $448,000 in federal funds.

The pilot program, if passed, would allow $1.2 million for salaries and $300,000 for administering the program.

Fifteen schools are scheduled to receive funds for the proposed work-study program, three from CSU.

Prof makes introduction

Austrians speak Friday

Dr. Max Riedlsperger, history professor, makes an introduction to Austrian dignitaries visiting campus:

Salzburg connection.

This title may conjure up memories of Helen McNinn's spy thriller of hidden Nazi gold and neo-Nazi intrigue set in one of the world's most beautiful cities and its spectacular hinterland of blue-black alpine lakes and soaring peaks. But to San Luis Obispo it should also suggest the close and increasingly intimate relationship between our city which annually host the San Luis Obispo Mozart Festival and the home of its patron-composer. This tie will again be celebrated this weekend with the appearance of the world-acclaimed Mozarteum Orchestra of Salzburg at Cuesta College Auditorium on Saturday night. The Cal Poly university community will be able to share in the benefits of the celebration of San Luis Obispo Salutes Salzburg as the consequence of the opportunity to host a number of high officials of the Austrian government.

Friday at 11:10 in the Cal Poly Theater Robert Graf, member of the Austrian Nationalrat, and president-elect of the Austrian Federal Chamber of Commerce will make a major address entitled "Austrian Economic Development: U.S.-Austrian Foreign Trade."

Immediately following is Austrian Ambassador to the United States, Dr. Thomas

Klestil, who will make remarks on the topic "Austria Between East and West."

It is a rare occasion that brings such distinguished foreign statesmen to our university and I strongly encourage all members of the community to attend.

While most American identify Austria as beautiful tourist destination, renowned for natural beauty, great skiing, ethereal music, historic and architectural monuments of a bygone glorious past, few are aware of the unique position that Austria occupies in the contemporary world.

Austria, alone among the states occupied by any of the Big Four victors of the second World War, was evacuated and permitted to pursue its own, neutral political course without overt interference from either east or west. Since 1955, Austria has recognized its pledge of "absolute and perpetual neutrality" as an explicit prohibition of membership in NATO and the European Parliament in Strassbourg where it maintains "observers" and as an implicit barrier to entrance into the European Common Market.

The consequences of this unique situation have led to the emergence of the idea of an "Austrian Model" for other countries striving to develop national identities or to disentangle themselves from the U.S.-Soviet power struggle. Basically the "Austrian Model" involves both the political and economic sector on which Friday's speakers

Bill won't affect Cal Poly co-op

By JOHN BACHMAN
Staff Writer

Co-operative education at Cal Poly is not threatened by the recent proposed state work-study program.

Though there have been rumors circulating that Cal Poly co-op may be hurt by the new bill because co-op and work-study may be competing for the same employers, the director of co-op said it would take a large state work-study program to have an impact on the Cal Poly program.

"If the state were going to plow a lot of money into it," said Co-op Director Fred Abitia, "there might be an effect. Cal poly is strong. I don't think there will be an immediate impact. I don't think it would have an effect unless it was millions and millions of dollars."

"I don't think it will be that big at this point."

The state will spend $1.5 million to set up a pilot work-study program, if Senate Bill 417 is enacted.

Cal Poly co-op presently has employers pay students' entire salaries, but the work-study bill would have the state pay up to 70 percent of the students' salaries when they work for profit businesses.

If employers were given a chance, said Abitia, they might say let's forget about co-op. But there are many added positive aspects to the program, said Abitia, including lack of paper work, motivated quality students and many committed companies.

"It's a lot of work," he said. "You can't do it overnight. It took years to get going."

The Cal Poly co-op program is planning to send out 1,000 students, each earning around $1,700-$1,800 a month, said Abitia, totaling as much as $9 million dollars.

The federal government pays 40 percent of the administrative costs of Cal Poly co-op, but next year co-op plans on paying for their program with money from the four unit fee they charge students.

The State Co-op Association said the proposed work-study bill would add new employers who in the past could not afford to pay a student a full salary under the co-op program.

"It would give them ways to develop positions with new employers," said California Co-operative Education President Carol Pritchard. Those positions could not have been funded in the past.

Senate explains degrees

By SUSAN ELLIOTT
Special to the Daily

The Academic Senate unanimously passed a policy Tuesday that specifies the differences between a bachelor of arts and a bachelor of science degree at Cal Poly.

The policy will serve as a measure to determine if degree changes or proposed degrees for new majors are appropriate. The need arose when some department proposals to change from a B.A. to B.S. degree were refused by the Chancellor's Office, in part because Cal Poly had no campus policy which specified the differences between the two degrees.

The new policy describes a B.A. as less specialized than a technical-oriented B.S. degree. The B.S. requires 186-198 units as opposed to 186 required for the B.A. Also, the B.A. is characterized as including such majors as languages, literature, history and other humanities. The B.S. is to include such majors as the physical and biological sciences, engineering and agriculture.

Six majors at Cal Poly award B.A. degrees: English, recreation administration, history, political science, liberal studies and speech communication. Over 1,200 students are enrolled in these majors.

The Political Science Department was one of the departments that was denied a request to change from a B.A. to B.S. degree. With the new policy distinction, Political Science Department Head Randal Cruikshanks said the department will probably try again.

He said a degree requiring more units would allow students more elective course choices while also satisfying general education and breadth requirements. He said the general education and breadth requirements, that set specific course restrictions for students, take away from the student's control of elective units.

However, Cruikshanks added, whether a student is awarded a B.A. or B.S. probably won't matter much to prospective employers or graduate schools.

"The importance is not that a B.S. is awarded over a B.A.," he said, "But that a degree is awarded."

The little student who cried bomb

When kids are young the older generations seem to have a favorite story to tell. The fable of the boy who cried wolf reminds a child not to yell for help unless he really needs it.

The way the story goes is that a boy yelled to be rescued from a wolf. Rushing to his aid, the townspeople discovered he wasn't serious, that it was just a game.

Just a little joke.

The boy did it again, yelling in urgency, and the people responded in the same way — rushing to his rescue.

Another joke.

Finally the boy did need help, but no one took him seriously. The boy, presumably, was eaten.

A juvenile story, to be sure, but one with a valuable lesson.

This quarter Public Safety responded to three bomb threats. They were three separate incidences in three different buildings: Robert E. Kennedy Library on Feb. 12; Science North, Feb. 28; and Mathematics and Home Economics, March 12.

Fortunately, all of the calls were false.

Of course Public Safety won't ignore something as serious as a possible bomb explosion. But it can well be imagined that with each phony call, the feeling that the call isn't real will heighten.

It hasn't been revealed yet through any investigation what the motives of the bomb threats were. Perhaps students found it funny or an effective way to get out of a test for which they were not prepared.

Section 148.1 of the California Penal Code states people who are caught and convicted of making bomb threats will be arrested and put in jail or prison for up to one year.

Bomb threats aren't a novelty anymore. The continued incidents of these threats are turning into a nuisance. Whoever has called in phony threats is selfishly disrupting the lives of many others. Each building threatened held hundreds of faculty and students who were there to give and get an education. They wanted, fundamentally, to be there.

The inconvenience is only a small product caused by the bomb threats. Terror is no doubt the primary product to a person who feels his life may be in danger for no apparent reason.

It's no funny joke to bring terror into others' lives. If threats continue and nothing turns up, the 50th time it happens, no one will take it seriously. The threat could be real. Then what?

Dorm showers can be an ordeal

Editor:

If you have noticed some dorm residents walking around campus with symptoms of hypothermia or covered with first degree burns, you might be wondering what sorts of dangerous experiments are being performed on these people. No, fugitive Nazi scientists are not torturing them. You are seeing the victims of the red-brick dorm showers.

Ever since the new solar water heating systems were installed at the beginning of the quarter, taking a shower has been like playing Russian Roulette. I was hoping that college life would be an adventure. I didn't know that the showers would be part of that adventure.

A student preparing to take a shower in the dorms will probably face either a freezing cold shower, or, if they are lucky, a lukewarm one. If someone is fortunate enough to find a tolerable shower, chances are that it will be interrupted several times by bursts of scalding hot water that come whenever a toilet is flushed. This trick is good for a few practical jokes, but after a quarter of burning in the showers, it gets annoying. This is no way to start the day.

I am not sure exactly what is being done to fix this problem, but it has not improved since the situation started. In a school with so many engineers, someone must be able to make a simple hot water system work.

Campus food supported

Editor:

After living on campus for seven quarters here at Cal Poly, I feel it is my duty to respond to Mr. Bielfelt's March 5 letter that degraded the food that the Foundation Food Service is serving to its dormitory residents.

In my opinion, the food far exceeds the bad, and the students who are a part of the system now don't often appreciate what they have until they move off campus and have to start preparing their own meals

— it's not exactly a bed of roses. The key to successful dining is through the use of discretion in likes and dislikes. Most students don't use discretion, and often sit around and gripe.

As far as the food getting worse next quarter, one cannot predict. After seven quarters time, I can safely say that I have not noticed the food getting any worse. The quality is still very good considering the number of students served.

Student taking cooking lessons from Chef Boy-R-Dee

Well, I finally broke down and learned how to cook. You know it's time to learn when your roommates are making pancakes and bacon for breakfast and you're eating stale Rice Chex.

I've learned a lot so far. I can make toast, boil water and turn on the oven. And I've picked up a lot of great cooking tips too. I've discovered spinach doesn't fry very well and that it helps to put chicken in a pan before you stick it in the oven.

When I fix dinner, I try to stick with easy things — like rolls. You just open the package, put the rolls in a pan and put them in the oven. No problem, right? Wrong, you also have to remember to take them out of the oven. Since I started making rolls, I've become the NHL's number one supplier of hockey pucks.

I'm willing to try any recipe as long as it doesn't have more than three steps. I've discovered this wonderful seasoning mix called Taco Joe. Talk about versatile: put Taco Joe in a shell-you have tacos, put it on lettuce-you have taco salad, put it on hamburger buns-you get Sloppy Joes. Or you can put it down the garbage disposal and do yourself a favor. Just add a package of Taco Joe and a can of tomato paste to hamburger and, shazam, a meal you'll never forget. Who's going to forget a two week case of heartburn? Taco Joe produces more gas than Saudi Arabia. When you eat Taco Joe you have to wash it down with Pepto-Bismol.

One day my roommate decided to teach me how to make spaghetti. "I'll make the sauce and you make the noodles," he says.

"How many noodles do I use?"

"A handful."

"A big handful or a small handful?"

"Just a regular handful."

"Is that a handful for you or a handful for me?"

"Just put some in the pan."

"Okay. Now turn on the stove."

"It helps if you put water in the pan."

"Does that make a difference?"

"Not if you like crunchy spaghetti."

"Okay, okay. Say, did you ever hear about the guy who bought a spaghetti farm?"

"A spaghetti farm?"

"Yeh, it was two feet wide and three miles long."

"Shut up and cook."

"How do I know when this stuff is cooked?"

"When it sticks to the wall."

"Huh?"

"Take a noodle and throw it against the wall. If it sticks the spaghetti's ready."

"Be serious."

"Try it."

So I fling a wet strand at the wall and it bounces off. "Try it again," he says, "and use a little more wrist."

So I peel it off the kitchen floor and fling it again. Thwap! It sticks — right to a painting my roommate borrowed from his mother. "Does that mean it's ready?"

The problem with cooking dinner at my place is trying to accommodate roommates with different tastes. One roommate won't eat fruit or vegetables. Whenever he gets on our nerves we mix a little corn in his dinner so he has to spend half an hour picking out every kernel. You have to wonder about a guy whose main source of Vitamin C is Fruit Loops.

My other roommate will eat anything — as long as it has cat-sap on it. He's the guy who poured orange juice on his Bran Flakes by mistake one morning and still ate them. He doesn't care what you feed him as long as it has lots of fiber in it. Funny,

I haven't seen my baseball bat lately...

My third roommate is really particular about his food. My goal is simply to get dinner on the table, he actually wants it to taste good. He wants spices in the food: not salt and pepper, but stuff called oregano and nutmeg. I don't even know which spices are which. They all look like pencil shavings to me. So I leave the spices to him and I guess they do make the food taste better. That is, when he doesn't pour half a bottle of curry into the chicken sauce. I haven't had anything that potent since Mom made a broccoli, tuna and cheese casserole. Now that's a meal that'll bring tears to your eyes.

Movie rentals part of ASI audio service

By LESLEY GLEASON

Staff Writer

The new ASI audio-visual service, Pollywood, is going into the movie rental business.

All movie rentals are $2 each and Pollywood has the top 20 movies available for students, faculty and staff. Some of the movies include "The Big Chill," "Purple Rain" and "Raiders Of The Lost Ark."

"We anticipated tapes would be the most popular, but it is the slide projectors, sync units and VCR equipment that really moves fast," said Marty Rudolph, administrative assistant.

The A.V. service was established for students because the existing state A.V. equipment in the Business Building would no longer be provided to student organizations.

"Essentially the ASI audio-visual service was set up to fill the void which was created by the state not being able to maintain equipment," said Rudolph.

There is a large selection of equipment ranging from state of the art models to bargain equipment for the starving student. The prices on equipment is more than competitive, said Rudolph.

Rudolph said they eventually they plan to purchase new, better equipment for students.

The new service is located in the University Union, Room 206 and is open Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

BILL

The bill is scheduled to go before the State Education Committee March 27, and will go on to the Senate Fiscal Review Committee before the Senate can vote on it.

If it is passed by the legislature and the governor, it would not go into effect until the spring of 1986, said Curtis Richards, legislative director of the California State Student Association.

"I think its chances of passing are real good," said Richards. The CSSA lobbies the legislature on bills that would benefit students. He said the bill has the support of both conservatives and liberals, giving it a good chance of passing.

It's designed to give financial aid that allows students to get career related experience. "It is not an employment bill."

Many of the details have yet to be hammered out, he said.

The director of the Cal-Poly work-study program said many co-op programs have failed. There are many aspects that need to be considered in order to start a program between schools and business. "If it were handled properly," said Abitia, "it would be a great program."

Research for the above article was made possible by the Reader's Digest Foundation.

with Abitia, Gollihur said he got a feeling for the extent of the co-op programs. "It gives us a much better idea what is going on out in the field."

"It reinforced the need to cooperate with the co-op programs."

Research for the above article was made possible by the Reader's Digest Foundation.

CO-OP

thought the state should reduce the percentage of money given to employers over time, causing those employers to pay more for the program. This would allow the work-study program to create more positions with the extra money.

If the state was smart, the bill would be designed more like the co-op program, said Abitia. The money would provide more jobs if employers were weened off the federal money.

The state work-study program resembles the Washington state program which requires employers pay at least 35 percent of their student-workers' salaries.

Washington is thinking of increasing the percentage employers must pay because it has more employers than money, said the assistant coordinator for the Washington Council on Postsecondary Education, Shirley Ort.

Washington had strong co-op programs before state work-study, she said, and the university co-ops have remained strong with the state program.

Seattle Pacific University has one the state's largest work-study programs and a strong co-op, said Carol Noonan, coordinator of job location and development at the university, and they try to blend the two.

"We work very cooperatively in how we market it (co-op and work-study)." She added the two programs enhance each other.

Abitia will be meeting with legislative representatives to discuss enacting the bill, since Cal Poly has the number one co-op program on the West Coast — it has dealt with many of the problems a state work-study organization will have to deal with.

"Schools that aren't as strong as us might feel apprehensive," said Abitia.

"My feeling is go ahead and use the the people that have expertise," he added. "Why reinvent the wheel?"

Senate Bill 417 was written in part by Greg Gollihur, research assistant for the California Postsecondary Education Commission. He said, "We're not trying to erect something that would conflict with existing programs."

'Brother From Another Planet' offbeat but percepti

By LISA MCKINNON

Special to the Daily

In a nutshell, "The Brother From Another Planet" (showing now through March 18 at the Rainbow Theatre), is an offbeat comedy about a mute black man who, in escaping his captors on that 'other planet,' crash lands his space pod on the outskirts of Harlem.

Beyond that, however, "The Brother From Another Planet," is also a reflective look at the past and current struggles of our own black society as witnessed through the Brother's eyes.

And what a pair of eyes they are. The Brother has amazing powers of healing and ESP, but he also has some pretty quirky ones involving sight, too.

When he wants to watch two men work out a drug deal but is unable to follow the proceedings himself, for example, the Brother peels one of his eyes out of its socket and deposits it in a nearby flowerpot to act as a remote camera.

Later, he simply pops the eye back into place to watch the action replayed. He can also make others see what he has seen by forcing them to hold one of his eyeballs.

Because he can't communicate verbally, special emphasis is placed on the Brother's eyes (happily in their sockets), throughout the film. Actor Joe Morton does a fine job of indicating the Brother's wide-eyed bewilderment as he encounters the crassness of our cash-oriented society, loud ghetto blasters, grubby subway systems — and drugs.

The Brother has escaped his own captors only to find himself in a world where people like him are free from physical slavery, yet are held captive by drugs and poverty. He is robbed by junkies at one point, and later finds a youth who has overdosed in a garbage heap.

He tries the drugs left in the young boy's pockets in an innocently curious gesture, and in the consequential drug-induced euphoria finds himself befriended by a rastafarian guru of sorts who takes him on a walking tour of the seedy city and tells him, "We're killing each other in these streets, Brother."

He wakes up alone in an alley the next morning, only to discover that someone has stolen his shoes. He isn't left alone for long, however.

A couple of white, extraterrestrial bounty hunters are hot on his trail and, as we are reminded by a museum exhibit on slavery the Brother went to see during the film, their methods are akin to those used by the slave bounty hunters of our own country's history.

Although their purpose is serious, the bounty hunters themselves are just two of the humorous characters presented in "The Brother From Another Planet."

Dressed in complete black like a couple of bad guys from an old western movie, they go around with photos of the 'escaped slave' to ask if anyone has seen him. It becomes obvious, however, that all their obnoxious tactics are the result of watching old television shows and movies. At one point the "Badges? We don't need to show you any badges," exchange from the classic "The Treasure of Sierra Madre" sneaks into their dialogue.

So despite all their posturing, the bounty hunters are hopelessly silly. They order beer "on the rocks," screech like monkeys when they're happy and jog in time to the soundtrack music during chase scenes.

Just as the characters in this film are not all serious, neither is the Brother's dealings with his new environment.

He meets and befriends a lot of streetwise Harlem inhabitants, manages to pick up some money here and there by fixing everything from video games to blenders and falls in love. He takes carefree pleasure in things other people tend to take for granted, like a wall covered with colorful graffiti. Food is another special joy. In one scene, he walks nonchalantly down the sidewalk while munching on a whole head of lettuce and a tomato.

Part of the specific appeal of this film lies in its amusing script, written by John Sayles, who also directed and edited the film in addition to playing one of the bounty hunters.

When the Brother (whose only obvious alien physical characteristic is a pair of feet with three big toes and very sharp nails), finally gets to bed his ladylove, she tells him, "You were great in bed last night, but you're going to have to do something about those toenails."

The uniqueness of this film is like a breath of fresh air after the glossing over of black concerns with comedy in "Beverly Hills Cop" and the tear-jerker treatment of extraterrestrials in "ET." "Brother From Another Planet" manages to make a successful combination of some pertinent black issues, the wonder of a man both pleased and perplexed by his new environment, and the offbeat but perceptive comedy of the filmmaker.

Harrison Ford excels

'Witness' a gem by Peter Weir

By CHRIS KAHN
Special to the Daily

Twenty years from now, the film community may erect a shrine to Peter Weir; he may be the Hitchcock of Australia. Film students at the turn of the century will bounce his name around like a cinematic volleyball.

Plain and simple: the man does almost no wrong. He may not always be perfect, but he never slips from the visual thightrope he walks between his idea and the viewers' appreciation of that idea.

The gems among his crown include "The Year of Living Dangerously," "Gallipoli," "The Last Wave," and presently, "Witness." Australia reveres him and America has successfully lured him away.

"Witness" is an American made film that finds a big city detective mixed up in a police scam that has already left two men dead, and the only link to the murders is a young Amish boy who inadvertently witnesses them.

Harrison Ford as John Book finally shows that there is life after Han Solo, and there is more to role-playing than wisecracking a cinnamon-roll-eared princess and blowing stormtroopers into the next galaxy. His depiction of the honest cop on the run from his crooked associates is perhaps the best, most genuine work Ford has done to date. It goes to show what a director like Weir can do for an actor.

The supporting cast is solid. The Amish woman Book falls in love with while hiding out from his fellow vengeful officers has an earthy beauty that stems from her love for the land and its simple provisions for life. And Peter Weir, the king of lighting, unfolds her visually as every woman must dream of being presented. Weir has also served up the innocence of the young Amish boy, Samuel, and his fascination with life in a fashion that rivals any child portrayal — Even Spielberg's ET.

If this movie were a mansion, every room would be perfect in decor, architecture and cleanliness. Sticking your forefinger on any frame of these reels, and you would find a splendid portrait with precise lighting, excellent choice of camera angle, and exquisite sense of action or emotion. He's a painter of moving images.

Perhaps its one weakness, and I certainly found no fault with it — only a question, was that the murders almost get lost in Weir's desire to bring the true flavor of the Amish lifestyle to the screen. A petty objection that may rest uneasy with some viewers in an otherwise masterful film.

It's a fact: Your car does not have to be serviced by the dealer to remain under warranty. And since you pay for the maintenance and upkeep anyway, you're free to choose the service that best suits your automobile's needs.

So where should you have your car serviced? Well you could have the dealer maintain it, but then you might be sacrificing the attention to detail your high-performance auto deserves.

Cal Poly professor to give ethnic speech in Europe

By KEVIN CANNON
Staff Writer

A Cal Poly professor of education has been asked to speak in the Netherlands as part of the International Consultation on Counseling and Ethnic Minorities.

Dr. Donald Cheek will journey to the University of Utrecht to present two, three-hour workshops dealing with ethnic problems and solutions. "They (Europeans) are having more and more problems with third world people of color."

"They (the scholars and planners) are very concerned to not make the same mistakes that have been made by the United States and South Africa."

The workshops presented will be "Cross-Cultural Perspectives in Mental Health" and "Assertive Behavior Training form a Black Perspective."

The workshops will involve discussion of questionable assumptions dealing with the idea of two separate knowledge systems. Cheek said he feels there are two separate and different knowledge systems. "One is the traditional body of knowledge we are all taught in school based on assumptions of the dominate group, which is white-oriented," said Cheek. "The other is non-traditional and lesser known."

Cheek said, "Many of the programs developed have limited relevance when applied to non-white people." The people involved in the workshops will be able to manage current programs better and develop new ones that can provide efficient service to visible ethnic groups as well as the general population.

Participants will become more aware and have a deeper understanding of the lifestyles, customs and traditions of the visible ethnic groups they must work with.

should be able to comment in detail. 1) In the political area, Austria has accepted neutrality and the non-involvement in the east-west conflict that this requires, but Austria has also emerged as a leader among the non-aligned states of the world with particular importance as a mediator in the Middle East and in the growing North-South dialogue. The construction of UNO-City in Vienna in the 1970's is an effort to catapult this small industrial, alpine republic into international prominence and to gain with this increase economic importance and national security. 2) In the economic area, Austria has also pursued an independent and successful course dictated by the impositions of neither the east nor the west. A combination of the break-up of old capitalist concentrations as the consequence of de-Nazification and reparations policies following the end of the second World War and post-war nationalization laws brought a happy compromise between the long-term economic perspectives of the public sector on matters such as profitability and active public investment, with the short-term profit goals of the private sector. The result has been a remarkable productive economy, relatively immune to the unemployment crises of the 1970's. Political neutrality also promoted early economic internationalism, so that imports from and exports to the Soviet Union and the Eastern European economic trade community have played a large role in Austrian trade policy along with trade with the west. Over the years, this role of middle man between the east and the west has expanded the "Austrian Model" from a focus on Europe to a full integration of Austria into the world economy. Austrian goods claim conformity with common market standards and aim at penetrating the world market.

As one of the ranking diplomats for Austria, Dr. Klestil is in an excellent position to address questions regarding these political issues, and Mr. Graf is superbly qualified to address the economic aspects of the "Austrian Model."

Finally, as we are all reflecting on the degree to which the ascension to power of yet another Soviet leader, we might think to question our Austrian guests as to their perceptions. They come to us from a country with a history, political system and culture that is squarely between the leviathan superpowers. Dr. Klestil and Mr. Graf may be able to offer insights on the United States and the Soviet Union that differ from the usual ones proffered us in our media.

Mustang streak still alive

By DAN RUTHMEYER
Staff Writer

Mustang Darren Pearson turned in a gem Wednesday as he scattered three hits and struck out seven in route to a 8-1 complete game victory over Westmont College.

"I thought he had real good stuff," said head coach Steve McFarland. "No one was really able to hit him."

Scoring a single run in the third inning, the Mustangs took an early advantage as shortstop Harvey Martinez received a leadoff walk and then proceeded to steal second.

A pair of ground outs by Mark Burdick and Mark Gambardella then brought Martinez across for the Mustang run.

Cal Poly got on the board again in the third as they used two base hits, a walk and a Westmont fielding error to account for two more runs.

Pearson sailed along in the first five innings, scattering two singles while striking out six.

Threatening in the seventh inning, the Mustang put two runners with on with one out, but ended up leaving them stranded.

Tiring in the eighth, Pearson gave up a pair of walks and a two ground outs costing Pearson the shutout.

The Mustangs delivered the knockout blow in their half of the eighth as they roughed up three Westmont pitchers.

The crushing blow in the five run rally was a base-loaded triple by right fielder Rich Nelson, who collected three hits on the day.

After seeing his team stake him to a seven run advantage, Pearson came out in the ninth inning to retire the Warriors in order, and come away with his second win of the season.

Before Wednesday game, the Mustangs had won their previous four by taking single victories from St. Mary's and Fresno State and double header sweep Sacramento State, improving their record to 11-10.

"We played well our last games," said McFarland. "The potential and ability are there. But we just have to go out and do it."

Against Sacramento, Cal poly received complete game performances from John Berringer and Mike Briare.

The Mustangs will take their five game win streak on the road Friday when they travel to Cal State Northridge. After playing a single game against the 15-5-1 Matadors on Friday, Poly plays a double-header against the same team on Saturday.

Intramural games played close

Intramural championship games that were played over the weekend proved to be very intense events, said a Cal Poly Recreational Sports supervisor.

The 1-pitch softball championship (open division) was won by the Runaway Mob, after an overtime extension of 15 innings, said Kevin Turley, the supervisor.

The game was played Sunday afternoon on the Cal Poly softball field. The residence hall team, Insatiable, took the championship in the Residence Hall division.

The men's indoor soccer team, Sting, won residence championship Sunday, while the co-ed team, Goobers, secured first place in their league, said Turley.

The rest of the intramural sports playoffs will take place tonight and tomorrow, said Turley. This includes all the various leagues of Basketball. Women will play Tuesday at 8 p.m., Men's B will play Tuesday at 9 p.m., and the semi-finals for Men's A will be on Tuesday at 1 p.m.

The Residence Hall league (FDC) will also play on Tuesday at 8 p.m., along with the six feet and under league at 9 p.m., said Turley.

The sorority and fraternity leagues will play their final games on Wednesday at 7 and 9 p.m. And the finals for the Men's A league will be played at 8 p.m.

All these games will be played in the Main Gym, said Turley.

Leading thief changes Yankee image

POMPAÑO BEACH, Fla. (AP)

— Texas pitcher Charlie Hough glared over at first base. There, coiled in a crouch, hands planted defiantly on his hips, was Rickey Henderson of the New York Yankees.

Henderson glared right back, challenging the pitcher, his eyes studying Hough. "I look at everything," he said. "His legs, his arms, his shoulders, his head, anything that will tip me off."

Hough threw over once, then again. Then came two more pickoff tries. On the fifth attempt, the ball skipped past first base and Henderson was on his way to third, a winner again in his perpetual cat-and-mouse game.

Every time Rickey Henderson reaches base, there is the threat of a steal.

Henderson is the only man to steal 100 or more bases more than once in a career. He has done it three times, including a record 130 steals in 1982.

With 493 steals in less than six seasons, he is halfway to a thousand in a specialty where the record is Lou Brock's 938.
